

PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE

Modelling Care and Putting into Practice

As educators, we have a responsibility to model caring for others as one of our basic psychological needs. As we deliberately put energy into this moral purpose, our students can learn and grow in this domain. This modelling has come alive in our continued support of sponsoring children's education in Liberia.

"We do not merely tell them (students) to care and give them texts to read on the subject, we demonstrate our caring in our relations with them." (Nel Noddings 1998)

If we want students to care for each other, it makes sense to give them an opportunity to put this into practice. One way we do this at MES is through our continued partnership with Provision of Hope. Despite the unpredictable nature of this school year, we are once again grateful to our greater school community for the unwavering support of this valuable, worthwhile project. Given the success of this year's efforts, we are now ready to increase the number of students we support in Liberia. A big thank you to our MES community for the care you have extended to our extra "classroom."

CARING FOR KIDS UPDATE

It has been an amazing week at MES as students learned about Liberia and why so many families there need help. The stories of some of the students we sponsor were told and we actually got to Zoom with one of our sponsored students from her home in Liberia.

Students responded with compassion and care-giving from their own money and asking others to help. This resulted in an overwhelming response from our MES students, staff, and community. Over $13,000 has been generously donated! This will make a difference in so many lives!

We are able to support our 13 students for another year and we will add new students who need help. In addition, we are exploring options on how the rest of the funds will be used for helping children and families in Liberia.

A huge thank you to all of you for being part of giving hope to children in need. Together we are growing a generation of kids who are looking beyond themselves and caring for the needs of others.
